To Whom It May Concern,

LETTER OF RECOMMENDATION FOR BAILA NISAR

As Baila Nisar's lecturer and co-supervisor for her PhD studies, I can confidently say that she is a responsible, proactive, and highly independent scholar. When she was in classes, namely Research Methodology and Data Analysis in English Studies, Baila was able to participate meaningfully in classroom discussions, and this speaks volumes of her profound worldview and her ability to engage in intellectual discourse.

As her research co-supervisor, I have noticed her inquisitiveness and willingness to accept constructive criticism. Her dedication is shown in how she is always quick to make changes and modifications based on feedback received. Not only that, she uses her discretion to find a happy medium where the supervisors' expectations and her personal research preferences are met. This shows that she is not just someone who expects to be spoon-fed, but she often proactively seeks refreshing and critical research ideas to solidify her own work.

It is important to note that it is not easy for her to travel abroad to study in Malaysia, yet her dedication demonstrates that she is willing to take risks for her academic growth. She has been able to blend seamlessly into the Malaysian scene, exploring the country's diverse places and cultures while continuing her research. Her project, which examines film studies through literary and cultural lenses, is gaining traction, and I am confident that her work is worthy of publication in established academic journals in due course. I am excited to see her research come to fruition, as I believe it will make a significant contribution to the fields of English studies, literature, and cultural studies.

I am sanguine that she will be a great asset to any organization due to her ability to blend well with others. Her humility and sociability are precisely what make her stand out as an individual—qualities that are increasingly rare today. I wish her all the best in her future endeavors, and I am confident that she will be able to juggle her work and studies with success.

Regards
