● RESEARCH INTERESTS

“Artificial Intelligence as a Catalyst for Smarter Governance”

---

This research explores how AI can transform governance from reactive to predictive, enabling governments to anticipate crises, craft evidence-based policies, and engage citizens with unprecedented transparency. Building on my political science foundation and field experience, I aim to design ethical AI frameworks that safeguard democracy, reduce inequality, and foster global trust in political systems.

The Role of Artificial Intelligence in Policy-Making: Ethical, Legal, and Political Implications of AI Governance"

My research will investigate the growing role of artificial intelligence (AI) in policy-making and governance. I will explore the ethical, legal, and political challenges posed by AI, such as bias in decision-making algorithms, transparency, and accountability. I am particularly interested in how AI governance impacts democracy, human rights, and public trust, and what frameworks can be developed to ensure ethical AI usage in shaping future policies.

“Climate Governance: Safeguarding Stability in an Age of Environmental Disruption”

Linking environmental science with political stability, this work investigates how climate change fuels migration, resource conflicts, and economic volatility. I will develop adaptive governance strategies that empower communities, integrate green innovation, and turn environmental threats into opportunities for sustainable prosperity and international cooperation.

Resilient Societies: From Conflict Zones to Cohesive Communities”

Rooted in my studies on sectarian violence and community empowerment, this research focuses on how governance, diplomacy, and grassroots action can rebuild fractured societies. By combining local wisdom with global peacebuilding strategies, it aims to create durable frameworks for reconciliation, trust-building, and social resilience.

The Digital Leap: Technology for Inclusive Global Development”

From AI to blockchain, emerging technologies hold the power to close — or widen — the development gap. This research investigates how digital transformation can drive economic empowerment, expand educational access, and strengthen governance, ensuring that the benefits of innovation reach the most vulnerable populations worldwide.
