Social and Emotional Assimilation of immigrants in Nabaneeta` Dev Sen's Looking for an Address	The study deals with the representation of different descriptions and narratives through the perspective of social assimilation and stratification of the immigrant population that is mainly based upon displacement, racial polarity and self- concept of social identity. This study focuses on the notion of Ethnocentrism with respect to the cultural chronology in developing social constructions as it ultimately relates to the antagonism between collective and individual self- categories that describe the overall process of social and emotional assimilation of immigrant population in a non- native land. In this research, the researcher has dealt with the modern dilemmas of marginalization, stereotypical perceptions and the role of cultural and social narratives related to the South Asian immigrants by using John Turner's Social Categorization theory.
